Silent Auction at the Fall Banquet

Here is another great opportunity to help support VFL.

At our Banquet in October, we will be having a silent auction and we need your help, not only to donate some good items for the auction but to come to the Banquet expecting to see something that you might like to bid on. We already have a few items and are looking forward to receiving donations between now and the Fall time.

Call Ivan Palmer at 519-426-1610, or Janet Palmer at 226-567-7474. Don't wait until the last minute, but start to consider what you would like to donate soon.

A good summertime project! Thank you.

Annual General Meeting

The Voice for Life Annual General Meeting (AGM) was held on Saturday April 29th at Parkview Meadows Christian Retirement Village, in the Craft Room, at 72 Town Centre Road in Townsend. Sadly, Willy Haverkamp, a member and former Office volunteer, died on April 24th, and her funeral was at Ebenezer Christian Reformed Church on the 29th. As well, earlier this year, we had already lost members Helen Livingston and Yvonne Pollet (both from Delhi). All at peace in the arms of the Lord.

Overall the meeting went well, and we thank all who could make it, and those who helped with the program and refreshments. From Nominations at the AGM, we welcome Suetyin Elsa Kwok as an additional Director on the Board.

Lt to Rt: Barra Gots, John Gots, Janet Palmer, Ivan Palmer, Christian O'Malley, Elsa Kwok, Lou Craig. Missing: Edward Kiernan, Ashley Snively

Who Cares About Pro-Life?

By Edward Kiernan, President

Abortion, assisted suicide, experimentation with human embryos, assisted reproduction that destroys embryos as part of the process, the use of drugs to induce early abortions ... try raising any of these topics and many people fail to see why you are making a fuss. Isn't all that "over" now? Hasn't the court made it all legal? What's to discuss? Why should we care?

But widespread indifference about something does not make it unimportant.

A hundred years ago, in 1917, not many people worried about the environment. Damage to land, sea and sky was happening, and people were no doubt vaguely aware of it, but it just didn't bother most folks most of the time.

When I was a teen in the 1980s there were huge protests in Canada against testing the Cruise missile. In the UK, where I spent some of the 80s, big campaigns were on for nuclear disarmament. Should we disarm or keep the nuclear deterrent to stop communist bloc expansion? "Better red than dead, or dead than red?" Remember those days? Remember those debates?

The 18 year old me would never have guessed that the 47 year old me would be living in a time when the world's nuclear arsenals would be virtually absent from the public mind. Now events in North Korea show that just because most of us haven't been thinking about nukes lately, doesn't mean they are "over" in reality.

Right to life concerns will never go away. The issues we seek to help educate others about will not be "solved" at some future date, even if public policy shifts in a pro-life direction. The legal right to life issues are only one aspect of what pro-lifers care about.

The social question – how do people view human life – as something sacred, or a meaningless commodity?

The personal question – what will I do about it when another human being's right to life makes demands on my life, my time and resources?

One way to encourage people to get educated about pro-life concerns is to show them how those concerns relate to their own lives and the lives of actual people they know. We ourselves need to stock up our knowledge of the issues to be able to inform people in one-to-one conversations, so we can give people facts and figures to turn over in their own minds. Let's not be cynical about that. We should have faith that people can learn to care about the lives of other people. If we plant the seeds, we gather in our own pro-life education.
